CALL FOR PAPERS

The concept of linguistic error is very broad and challenging to encapsulate into a single definition. For example, a violation of a linguistic norm commonly shared by a community of speakers is considered an error. The same can be said regarding errors as a failure to abide by a school norm. Errors also encompass cases of not adhering to a microcommunity norm, shared by a small group of speakers of any background. Errors can affect both oral and written language. From the perspective of different levels of language analysis, errors can involve spelling, pronunciation, morphosyntax, textuality, translation, and the comprehension and formulation of linguistic acts on a pragmatic level.

The definition and categorization of error(s) also vary depending on the disciplinary approaches used and the areas of application. The concept of error employed in language teaching is not the same as that analyzed in psycholinguistics, patholinguistics, and so on. It is worth noting that in almost all languages, the concept of error is often overlapped with another word used as a synonym (e.g., errore/sbaglio in Italian, erreur/faute in French, error/falta in Spanish, error/mistake in English...).

The objective of the 10th International Congress of the Phrasis Association is to share the latest developments in the analysis of error within phraseological and paremiological studies. To achieve this goal, proposals addressing errors from various fields and perspectives (linguistics, language teaching, psycholinguistics, neurolinguistics, etc.) are expected. Contributions, whether empirical, theoretical, or methodological, are welcome, including interdisciplinary ones that may help to shed light on the role of errors in the phraseological and paremiological productions of one or more languages.

Presentation can be given in one of the following languages:

- Catalan
- English
- French
- German
- Italian
- Portuguese
- Russian
- Spanish
